

A number of media streaming services, including Netflix, Hulu, and Twitch, now offer an option for their users to stream directly off the internet. With the addition of these media streaming services to remote control software like Beamr, which started as your typical TV remote but has evolved into an app that allows you to control myriad devices throughout your home—from just one device or even one browser tab—the world has become much more accessible than it ever was before. Using Beamr is incredibly easy: just download it on any browser you use regularly and then create your account. This account, in its simplest form, will allow you to control your television with it, but there are other features in the app that you can explore. Under the "Channels" tab you'll find a large list of supported channels, which can be used all in one go or in any order you see fit. You may put together an exhaustive list of channels that give you the ability to completely control your home with just one device or browser tab. Remote control software has even become accessible and easy to use with the addition of Beamr. Rather than having multiple remotes to control various devices, you can simply open up a tab and control everything from there. Streaming services like Netflix, Hulu, and Amazon Video are often confined to one device or area. With Beamr you can put together an all-inclusive package that gives you the ability to watch what you want, when you want—provided the service offers a streaming option. One of the most notable features of Beamr is how easy it is to use. Rather than having multiple streaming services on different devices, you can simply track down all of the services that offer streaming on one device that is easy to operate. Beamr even makes it possible for you to control your television through commands like "navigate up" and "volume up."

Most streaming services work on smartphones, but do not offer smart features on desktop browsers, laptops or TVs that you may be looking to use them on. Beamr is a platform that makes it simple for users to stream services like Netflix, Hulu and Amazon Video in one device.

By using just one browser tab, you will be able to see all the latest shows and movies available to watch through these popular streaming services.
