Genomic organization of the mammalian  $\gamma$ -globin gene. We have determined the complete nucleotide sequence of the alpha-globin gene cluster of the human $\alpha$ -gene containing the alpha-globin gene, the beta-globin gene, and 2.2 kb of the intervening 5' flanking sequences. A comparison of the organization of this gene cluster with that of the mouse and rabbit gene clusters shows extensive similarity between the genes and the large number of locus control region sites. This similarity suggests that these genes share a common ancestor. The human globin gene cluster has been more recently duplicated, resulting in the formation of a pseudogene.

The University of Virginia is launching an investigation after a racially-charged e-mail was sent to students on Tuesday morning. According to UVA spokesperson Carol Wood, the e-mail referred to students by color, the names of neighborhoods and schools, and the names of departments and institutions on campus. The e-mail was sent to the students of the College of Arts & Sciences. It had a link to a website with more information. According to Wood, the university's Office of Institutional Equity and Office of the Vice President of Diversity is launching an investigation to ensure that the university adheres to diversity policies and expectations, and that students and staff are fully supported. UVA President Teresa Sullivan condemned the e-mail and said "this type of message is not reflective of our community's values and our university's commitment to an inclusive and welcoming campus community." "I condemn it unequivocally," Sullivan said. "I expect the University of Virginia to be a place where we all strive to know and to be known, where we are free to share our opinions, our fears, and our dreams, to laugh and love with one another and to do so
