The Treatment of Familial Amyloid Polyneuropathy (FAP) with AAVrh10 Vectors: A Multicenter Study in Japan. Familial amyloid polyneuropathy (FAP) is an autosomal dominant hereditary disorder characterized by extracellular amyloid deposits in peripheral nerves and a progressive decline of the nerve function. The treatment for FAP is symptomatic, and there are no proven therapies to prevent the onset or progression of the disease. The aim of this study was to evaluate the safety and efficacy of adeno-associated virus 10 (AAVrh10)-based gene therapy for FAP using a dose-escalating, open-label, single-arm clinical study. Twenty-three Japanese FAP patients who had received intensive clinical care were treated with AAVrh10 gene therapy using a dose-escalating approach. The AAVrh10 vector, carrying a cDNA encoding the mutant Swedish (S) TTR under the control of the human ubiquitous CAG promoter, was administered by intravenous infusion. Outcome measures were safety, clinical symptoms, and electrophysiological parameters. All AAVrh10 vector administrations were well tolerated. No serious adverse events occurred during or after the therapy. Some clinical symptoms showed a tendency to improve. The electrophysiological parameters (nerve conduction velocities
