The Brexiteer MP met Donald Trump last month to hold talks about trade and immigration - but has now shared a one-pager explaining how European Union rules will be changed to allow the US president to impose "sanctions" on other countries. Theresa May told Sky News that the Brexit negotiations had "never been easy", but Mr Trump's refusal to join any future European Union trade agreement has "made it difficult for us to talk about". Brexiteers like Mr Rees-Mogg say he is so impressed by the president that they would have been surprised if the US leader had not taken part. Mr Rees-Mogg held a discussion with Mr Trump last month at a site that includes Winston Churchill's flat. He outlined how the United States will be able to impose economic sanctions on countries "with which we have no trade agreement" if they do not change their behaviour. The document seen by Sky News reveals that the EU will be asked to give Washington authority to ensure that "sanctions can be imposed or lifted on any person or legal person, in any territory, for any reason". But it also adds: "The EU would not agree to such extreme measures, since they are a threat to the very essence of the Union." Image: Mr Trump has tried to force the EU to
