It's great for web designers, graphic designers and photo editors. However, it's worth noting that some of the tasks that Photoshop can do but are not so easy in Photoshop Elements are very easy in Photoshop and Adobe Photo Suite, so there's really no need to get a third-party product. In fact, the list of tasks you can do in Photoshop Elements may vary from what you can do in Photoshop. But if you absolutely must use Elements, here are the tips and tricks that most graphic designers use to make their editing process faster and more efficient: If you're only learning to edit images in Photoshop Elements, you may have an initial illusion that everything in Photoshop is simpler, but in fact, that's far from being the case. For all the cool features, Photoshop Elements has a far simpler user interface, so it makes it easier to learn. For example, the proportional and absolute ruler is only available in Photoshop, so if you're just learning to edit images in Photoshop Elements, it's very easy to accidentally select your image twice with the ruler. You also may mistakenly select the Selection tool, which is more for general purposes, not for editing images. It would be better to use Photoshop Elements to just learn the basics and then, once you are more comfortable with editing images in Elements, you can transfer your knowledge to Photoshop. In this tutorial, we're gonna be using Photoshop Elements to edit images, but don't worry, if you want to transfer your Photoshop knowledge, it's very easy to do that, and you'll learn more that way, too. Tips and tricks to edit images in Photoshop Elements 1. Work efficiently using layers At first, when you start to use the tools in Photoshop Elements, you may find it difficult to determine which layer contains what. But, in fact, it's quite easy to determine which layer contains what. You can easily create a mask to mask out your original image. How to create layers in Photoshop Elements? To create a new layer, simply right-click on the image you want to work on, and the layer options will appear. To create a new layer, simply right-click on the image you want to work on, and the layer options will appear. Note: If you hold down SHIFT while right-clicking on the layer options, you can easily create a new layer without a color overlay. Once you select the New Layer icon, you'll a681f4349e

In the aftermath of the assassination of Russia's ambassador to Turkey, Ankara was quick to claim - without evidence - that it was almost certain it was an "act of terror". Now, Turkey is launching a probe into the killing. Since the summer of 2016, Moscow has increasingly targeted Turkey's presidency - through a journalist, a parliamentarian, and now an ambassador. On Tuesday, Ankara, which has backed Syrian President Bashar al-Assad in that war for the last six years, said it would carry out "investigations" in the "murder" of its ambassador. Russia said it was a "hostile act", and pro-Russian separatists in the eastern part of the country quickly claimed responsibility. Russian President Vladimir Putin's office on Wednesday said Moscow was treating the incident as an "act of terror". Moscow has long maintained that the conflict in the Donbass region has been sparked by external actors, and has accused Washington and its allies of being behind that violence. Now, there are fears that this latest provocation could quickly spiral out of control and lead to a deepening crisis in Syria, if pro-Russian forces find a way to link the events back to Moscow. Al Jazeera's Sinem Koseoglu reports from Ankara.

Q: Using jquery and 'onclick' to send back to query Using: `$('#id').on('click', function(){ alert('hey'); return false; })` How do I make jquery change the value of #id? I was hoping to call it again and have it change back but I don't think this is the way to do it. I know there is a "better" way to do it, but I've been trying to get this to work. (I know the id is not gonna change but I just like seeing it in console/someone else's eyes) Any pointers? Thanks!

A: There is no easy answer since it depends entirely on what the click action is. For example, if the user clicks on a link, the action will change the href of the link. In that case

As a traditional vascular injury, aortic injuries are rare compared to pulmonary and major peripheral vascular injuries. Therefore, the understanding of aortic injury repair has not been well established because of the rarity of these injuries. According to literature review, we could get a handful case reports about the unique intervention for aortic injury ([@B1]-[@B10]). Here, a case of aortic injury during car accident is reported. A 38-year-old man was injured in car accident and underwent surgery for both his injuries including two high-velocity crushing injuries of the lower extremities, fractures of the right distal and medial clavicle, left forearm fracture, pelvic injuries, and aortic injury. The patient underwent emergency exploration of the aorta by the percutaneous route using the pigtail catheter. A pericardial patch was applied and a C-clamp was placed at the proximal aortic stump. Afterward, the external iliac artery was anastomosed with the left femoral artery. The distal side was reconstructed with an extra-anatomic bypass using a saphenous vein. The final surgery was completed after the patient's thoracic and abdominal vascular injuries were treated. However, the patient was in a hypoxemic and acidotic state after the procedure, so our team continued with the management of his large volume blood transfusion and reoperation for his aortic and cardiac injury. The patient recovered well after the operation. The management of the case in this report is unique because there were no reports of the repair of aortic injury by the percutaneous route. Compared to the direct repair of the main trunk, the percutaneous route is a satisfactory option for managing aortic injuries. However, the pigtail catheter, the C-clamp, and the anastomosis require additional time to complete the operation, which means a prolonged hospital stay, the risk of infection, and a high reoperation rate. Recently, treatment of vascular injury by the percutaneous route is well established, and a variety of catheters and sutures have been reported ([@B11]). As a result, the percutaneous repair of vascular injuries has been widely used in clinical practice ([@B12]). We consider that the percutaneous repair of vascular injuries should be performed by the surgeon who can complete the operation quickly without the use of a pigtail catheter
