Well then you may want to consider the "soul-stealing" study tips from a legendary professor. Back in the 80s, Jeffrey Citron was a professor of psychology at Northwestern University. His students loved him because he made studying fun: He'd shove his head into the trash can, followed by his back, followed by his hand and then his wrist. The whole time, he'd snort, giggle, grunt and yell out, "Hello!" If students had more than 15 questions on a test, he'd say, "Tough luck, you suckers!" But he didn't just make studying seem like an easy-peasy game of Donkey Kong. He also loved to crush on students. In fact, he named his first book, in 1989, Crush on You. In 2004, he published a revised version, Crush: The Anatomy of a Crush. His advice for students? Ask questions The best way to approach studying, said Citron, is to ask yourself, "What do I want to know? How can I know this?" If you just want a test score, you're probably doomed. If you want to learn something, then, hey, you're on the right track. But if you're seeking self-improvement, or you want to 6a5afdab4c
