The price of Cardano has been fluctuating between $0.012 and $0.06 each day on a strong bulls circle – all this while the ADA/BTC pair has been in decline. Over the last 10 days or so, this cryptocurrency market has had a volatile and destructive price trend. This trend has set many cryptocurrency projects back on their feet, causing a significant fall in their prices. This, however, does not have to be a negative for ADA. Cardano's Metrics Do not let the 9 months of lethargy ruin what was a good year for Cardano – as many of you know by now, Cardano is now the 11th biggest cryptocurrency. It currently boasts a market cap of over $1.5 billion. It is a blockchain that was once thought to be dying and has raised $500 million in the form of Token Sales. It recently launched its Mainnet version of Cardano. It is the first blockchain that is 100% open source and stands for decentralization and community involvement. Cardano offers a lot of features – some of them have been mentioned above. However, these features are currently underwhelming in comparison to the other leading cryptocurrencies such as Bitcoin and Ethereum. Cardano offers a lot more in terms of utility and benefits in the future. It is a blockchain that aims to address the many issues that exist in a centralized system such as banks, and the lack of decentralization of control that comes with it. While the technology is still in development, the reason why it has grown so large is because it offers the best solution to existing problems out there.
