Arabic WordNet Browser is an easy to use multi-lingual concept dictionary with mappings between word senses in Arabic and those in the Princeton WordNet (English) v2.0. Supports searching and browsing of Arabic and English terms. W3C Note This Working Group defines the Web interface language, called WebIDL, to enable developers to use Web languages to access language-dependent data. This language is one of a family of languages called Composite Web Languages, which is used to access the resources of a Web page, allowing a single document to be used in multiple languages, including those of the Web user. 1. Introduction As the Web becomes an increasingly important medium for communicating ideas, research, and information, it becomes important to incorporate the multiple languages in which Web content may be expressed. For example, current Web browsers typically provide a choice of a few European languages or a few American languages. This Working Group is developing a language called WebIDL which will allow a single document to be used by Web browsers in multiple languages. The primary benefit of WebIDL will be to enhance the richness of Web content by giving users access to content that uses features only available in specific languages. 2. Scope This specification defines the semantics of a language known as WebIDL, which is similar to the XLink language [XLink]. This language is used to bind representations of language-dependent data, such as strings, to the underlying language model. WebIDL is designed to be used with Web languages which are not in this specification. For example, XLink is commonly used with the XML language [XML] and the JavaScript programming language [Javascript]. 2.1. Glossary Alphanumeric character: Characters in the ISO 8859-1 character set. Asterisk: A character in the mathematical symbol '*' (the 'star'). Aspect: A semantic category. For example, terms which correspond to animals, things, people, etc. Aspect Value: The number of occurrences of an aspect in a particular sentence. Base URI: The URI of the root document of the Web page in question. The '&' character is not allowed in a base URI, but can be encoded. Binding: The process of making a resource available to a Web language. Binding Operation: An operation that binds a resource to a Web language. Boolean: A value which is one of true or false, other than 0 or 1. Bookmark: An identifier for a resource. The URI associated with a bookmark is the URI of the resource which is being used to
