It is located on the island of South Falkland, and has a population of around 450. History The name Mogga is Old English and means "a settlement of sheep". The earlier name was Moggawhar, which suggests that it was of the sort of place where a person would send a man to find sheep to drive. This name is still sometimes used to refer to the entire settlement. On 30 September 1774, Charles Richardson, an officer serving with the East India Company, sailed for the Falklands on board the San Juan. On 4 October he landed at Saint Mary's where he found Captain Pritchard, the governor of the Islands, and brought with him a letter from the Committee of the East India Company for the settlement of the East Falkland Islands. On 21 October the San Juan sailed from Saint Mary's carrying a boat with provisions and Captain Richardson arrived in Port Egmont in South Falkland on 25 October. When he landed he found a small number of inhabitants, and also discovered a small herd of sheep. This was the beginning of the settlement of the islands. Notable people The writer Peter Nicol, born in Mogga, describes it as having the benefit of being the "oldest" settlement in the Falklands, with its own church and cemetery. His father, his two brothers and his grandfather are buried in Mogga churchyard, and Peter describes their gravestones as "very simple and rather different" from the gravestones of the Anglican church at Port Pleasant, also in the village. Sport Mogga has three bowling clubs: the Mogga Bowls Club, the Stone Crocks Bowling Club and the Old Stone Crocks Bowling Club.
