ys@antibot.comUpdate (June 12, 2018): The Court of Appeal has overturned Paul's conviction, concluding that the trial judge's instructions were inadequate. The prosecution appealed the ruling, but the case was dismissed on June 13. Paul has applied to the Supreme Court of British Columbia for a stay of his pending execution. Paul had originally asked the Supreme Court for a stay of his death warrant, on the grounds that the lower court judge who convicted and sentenced him in 2006 violated his rights. He also applied to the B.C. Court of Appeal, alleging the trial judge's instructions on the lesser included offence were inadequate. That application was denied last October. In May, the Supreme Court of B.C. declined to issue a stay of his execution and the court's decision is the subject of an appeal by Paul's legal team. Paul was originally convicted in 2006 of one count of first-degree murder for the April 22, 1995, shooting death of three people. The jury that convicted him was instructed on the lesser included offence of second-degree murder, but the judge did not provide the jury with a complete set of instructions on that offence. In February 2006, the B.C. Court of Appeal overturned Paul's murder conviction, ruling the instructions that were given to the jury were inadequate. Paul had argued the trial judge's failure to provide the jury with complete instructions on the lesser included offence was an error of law, and, therefore, the conviction should be overturned
