Brief Description of the Prior Art Networks of sensors or transducers are employed in many applications, such as to monitor temperature, gas, liquid, pressure, chemical concentration, etc., in process control systems. In many applications, such as for chemical plants, it is highly desirable to be able to monitor and adjust chemical compositions in the process without interrupting the process by conventional means such as by shutting down and cleaning or replacing valves, seals, and other components of the plant. In many applications, such as the chemical, nuclear, or military industries, it is essential to monitor and control chemical compositions within the system being controlled. Typically, the chemical composition in a system being controlled is in the form of a liquid or gas, and must be monitored or treated to control the composition at a predetermined level. The composition in liquid form may need to be transported from one point to another in a pipe, tube, valve, or other container. Since many industrial processes cannot be interrupted, these products must be transported through the system, with the flow rate being controlled as appropriate. Historically, the solvent flow rate has been controlled by controlling the flow of steam into the end of the pipe, causing the solvent to boil off, and therefore constrict or reduce the cross-sectional area of the pipe.

When you press the record button the app begins to perform the function of the camera. In fact, unlike a regular camera, it's not activated by a button but rather when you place an object close to the lens. It works only with smartphones and tablets. If you want to stop the video you can do it from the app itself with the capture button.

Editor of Journal of Economic Behavior & Organization, 2007-08. The Landmark Zuckerberg Panel (liveblog) Hosted by ABC and The Atlantic. Moderated by Richard Wolffe. Joined by Chris Rock, Richard Greenberg, and others. Good morning. I'd like to kick this off with a few stories from my fellow panelists. First, in his Tedx Talk, Chris Rock provided us with a valuable history lesson of the origin of the group we're in today.

Through this point, the panel has been absolutely riveting, and I'm glad to have Chris as part of it. So, as you're here for the panel, feel free to stay and soak it up. Next, Richard Greenberg has called out Rick Perry as an economic illiterate. While he may be called out for that, I would like to note that Rick Perry has a firm grasp on his economic knowledge base, evidenced by his keynote speech at the Republican National Convention earlier this year. So, while he may be a bit lacking in basic economics, I'm not sure that makes him a fiscal illiterate or a total fool. So, we've got some fabulous stories. Let's get this thing started. Richard Wolffe is literally the host of this panel. And I love Richard. He's like a comedic, original Peter Sellers. He'
