Using Photoshop is easy. Once you've chosen a file that you want to edit, you click the "edit" option, then open Photoshop's file browser. Then navigate to the directory of the image. Then click on the file name and open it in Photoshop. With an image open, you can select the options you want to edit, then click the "edit" option. Here is a screenshot of the options you can select in Photoshop: In the screenshot above, I clicked on the bottom layers "Layer Masks" option. Then I changed the document state to New and clicked on "edit." This layer mask looks like this: Now to the right, in the timeline, you'll see the timeline options under the Layer palette. Click on the "Mask" icon. This option turns the gray area and the blur of the mask around the logo you placed on the photo into a black and white image, leaving only the logo area yellow. This turned the entire area that I masked to the logo to black and white. Now, to apply this change, go to Edit > Copy and hold the C key on your keyboard. Then go to Edit > Paste in Front and click on the P key on your keyboard. This pastes the image at the end of the Layer palette. Now you can apply a new layer to the image and apply this "mask" to it. Here is the final picture with the layer mask added to the image: The layer mask can be used to create some interesting effects. For example, to create an effect like the one you see below, you can make a layer mask with a very simple black mask with a few pixels in red that covers the area that will be grey in the final layer. Then you can add a layer and change its color on the Layer palette to any color. Then go to Edit > Copy and hold the C key on your keyboard. Then paste the layer on top of the bottom layer. This lets you edit the color of the layer. Change the layer color to any color that you want. Then use the mouse to click and drag and mask the image. As you drag over the color, you will see that the color outside your image will turn to the color that you have selected. This creates some very interesting effects. Another interesting use for layer masks is "burn" effects. A burn is when you use layer mask to set an area on a layer that is made of one color, and your layer by moving water which is essentially the fastest way we are able to investigate seismic properties at the Earth's surface. The instrument moves along the length of the drilled hole, which is typically less than a kilometer. The instrument is lowered to the bottom of the borehole and records the velocity of the mud or fluid in the hole wall, and the amplitude of the reflected seismic signal. GPS Seismometer GPS logs are fast tools for detecting the location of earthquakes and determining the depth of the event. GPS Waveforms are fast tools that can detect the source and origin of an earthquake Drilling, monitoring and logging of boreholes is a vital part of the surveying, monitoring and forecasting for everything from engineering to the environment. GPS is an acronym for Global Positioning System and has become a major tool in oil and gas exploration and production. Seismology is used to predict the occurrence of earthquakes, monitor the intensity of aftershock sequences and anticipate reservoir sealing events. Forecasting is used to manage possible catastrophic events. GPS survey and correlation processes are becoming common techniques employed to track changing oil and gas fields from one production cycle to another. Additionally, the use of GPS surveying/correlation techniques permits the monitoring of aspects that would have been otherwise difficult, such as underground water withdrawal, salt water injection and slope deformation. Flooding refers to the situation in which a lake, reservoir or inland body of water (e.g. the ocean or ocean floor) is permitted to discharge its water. Flooding can occur when a natural discharge channel, or in a human-made case, culvert is breached. During the Dispersant boom much of the "safeguards" for lakes, reservoirs and ocean's water levels were lost. The idea being that if there was a problem with the lake or ocean, the oil could still flow to the pipeline and be distributed by pipeline to market. This openness and lack of precaution with the well is why we are now losing lakes and reservoirs, such as the Chesapeake Bay, and many more. Now that the industry has been alerted to the serious loss of ground and fresh water that is occurring because of the lack of appropriate safeguards and regulations, that is already changing the future of oil and gas. In the USA, the regulatory agency for discharge of water to navigable waters is the US Army Corps of Engineers (USACE). Flows associated with flooding are regulated by USACE.

... nor any other sports that involve lots of hitting with a bat. It's unavoidable to shoot a frisbee with your finger, but nobody forces you to handle a bat. It's not like baseball is still an active sport, it's not like any of those other sports are any longer active. Click to expand... They still are active to some degree, several states still use baseball as a youth baseball league, a large fraction of city and rural youth that play baseball in spring would have been butchered in the explosion of softball, which is essentially a soft headed team sport with very bad equipment and rules. That is entirely true. I was a Pop Warner kid. We played baseball, but softball is far more popular. Just ask any of the players in the 19th or 20th century. It's only the revisionist liberal weirdos who think the only sport that involves hitting a ball is baseball, and just because an individual playing a sport believes it's their preferred sport, doesn't mean the majority of the public is that way. It's the reverse. Click to expand... I don't think anyone is arguing that the majority of the public is such. I'm arguing that they aren't the major factor in the decline of baseball. In fact, the decline of baseball was very well under way already during the previous era of the iron curtain, and that in no small part had to do with the major leagues taking on a totally different cultural emphasis. The problem with the current sports model is that it can't adapt to a changing society, and it's not going to be the major power it once was. Baseball is a star organization that can't compete with the social trends of today. We're going to see baseball change at some point, but it's going to take quite a while. Click to expand... Don't forget the fact that in the last decades of the era of the iron curtain, baseball was killed off by TV and the decline of the broadcast companies. The game was dying anyways, with the previous era being home to almost nothing in the way of a national following. Click to expand... Television was a matter of resource allocation. The new media was more expensive to develop, but the goal was
