The Canadian Institute of Health Information estimates that, in Canada, there are 5,584 million lost workdays due to back pain annually. However, the societal costs of back pain have not been quantified. The objectives of this study were to estimate the annual societal cost of back pain in Saskatchewan and Manitoba by applying the cost-of-illness approach. Population incidence data on back pain were obtained from the 1996/97 Saskatchewan Health annual survey and the 1995/96 Manitoba Health annual survey. Annual costs were determined by adopting the Canadian Community Health Survey's definition of the public sector. Direct and indirect costs were combined by multiplying incidence, duration, and unit cost estimates. In the Saskatchewan survey, 44% of non-institutionalized adult respondents reported back pain in the prior 12 months, giving a population incidence of 20.6%. Direct costs were estimated at $23.4 million, whereas indirect costs were estimated at $126.3 million. In Manitoba, 42% of non-institutionalized adult respondents reported back pain in the prior 12 months, giving a population incidence of 23.3%. Direct costs were estimated at $8.6 million, whereas indirect costs were estimated at $39.3 million. Back pain causes considerable direct and indirect costs to the public sector in both provinces. Back pain prevention strategies may reduce the economic burden on health care payers and the community.Tana: Attached are the NDA's for the above-referen
