It seems like every other time I try to upload the PDF file to the wiki, there's a problem. I'll try with the alternate upload method and post any information I can find on the problem here (like I did in this case). Hopefully this won't keep happening. Update 4: The file did upload to the wiki. It just looks like this is the only page on the wiki that was generated by the import. I don't think this is causing any problems since it only happens when I try to upload a second time. Update 5: Weird. I tried it again and it worked this time. Update 6: Another weird thing. This is the request headers from that second upload: Date: Mon, 18 Sep 2011 10:17:54 GMT Server: Googlebot/2.1 (+ Accept-Ranges: bytes Content-Type: text/html; charset=UTF-8 Cache-Control: private, max-age=0 Content-Length: 957 I'm not sure why the content-type is text/html. I thought it would be image/jpeg since that's the mime type of the image. Update 7: The file uploaded. I'm not sure what caused the problem in the first place. Something seems to be going on internally with the wiki that I didn't notice until now. A: If you're using the HTTP PUT method, you're likely to generate some additional headers in the request that do not appear in the response that you're getting back, so when you're requesting the image you're getting back, the Content-type header is just text/html. If you were using the HTTP PATCH method, the response would include the content-type header that you're seeing. PATCH is a special case in that the server has no idea that the content was the representation of an image, so it shouldn't assume any particular content-type. It's possible that some error, or different method of uploading, is causing a problem. In 2004 the Chronicle of Philanthropy reported that New York City parents have the highest proportion of college-educated parents of any U.S. metropolis, and said of the city's parents and their contributions to schools: "Hence, parents are pivotal to the development of successful local and national education reform efforts." Of the U.S
