together, and came upon an orc. "Hello," said the orc. "I am a wizard," said the orc, "and I have an enigma for you." Bestra looked at the orc, and asked, "What enigma is that?" "I am an orc," said the orc, "I am one of the worlds." "Oh," Bestra replied. "And I am Bestra." "So, are you going to give me the enigma?" asked the orc. Bestra replied, "I have always been a very good gardener. And I would like to know what kind of flower grows in a duck's ear?" "That is easy. The answer is: Lily of the valley." "That is a very beautiful flower," said Bestra. "If I had a flower like that, my garden would always be beautiful." Bestra thought about this, and then said, "If I had a flower like that, my heart would always be happy." "It is very beautiful and very sad," said the orc, "it is a mystical flower." Bestra said, "You are a nice orc. I would love to live with you, and our children, and our children's children, and so on." "That would be wonderful," said the orc. "I am a nice orc. I am a good wizard. That is how I came to the world." And so the couple were married. Once they had settled in, the orc had a baby, and he named it George. Then he had another baby, and he named it Otis. Then he had a baby, and he named it Dana. When the time came for her to have her first child, the orc had a dream. "I dreamt that my blood flows through Dana's veins," said the orc. "I am a very good wizard," he added. When the time came for Dana to have her first child, the orc had a dream.

We compared two methods for estimating the volume of donated human red blood cells (RBCs) stored in the refrigerator, stored at 4 degrees C, or in the blood bank at room temperature. To standardize the volume of each unit of RBCs, we measured the hematocrit (Hct) of each unit prior to storage, to determine the volume of packed red blood cells (pRBCs) in the unit. RBCs were diluted with 0.9% saline, centrifuged and the Hct was determined with an automated cell counter. The volume of pRBCs determined by this method was similar to the volume of pRBCs determined by the vapor pressure method of the AABB Hematology Reference Manual for blood centers. The correlation coefficients were $r = 0.97$ (pRBCs stored at 4 degrees C) and $r = 0.96$ (pRBCs stored at room temperature). The average difference between the two methods was 0.06 mL. With the vapor pressure method, a greater variation in volume was observed. The volume of pRBCs may be more appropriately estimated when the pRBCs are stored at 4 degrees C and refrigerated units are no longer routinely discarded. Q: How to output tag values in brackets? I was wondering how to output tag values in brackets, something similar to what languages have. e.
