With the new feature, players are now able to create new and exciting moves, as well as learn to take down their opponents more efficiently. The system is also capable of replicating a player's goals, such as the "tap shot" and the "no look pass." The new in-game systems will also allow players to see the ball in the sky, aided by a new "explosion effect" that makes players in the crowd "explode" onto the ball as it's in the air. On the pitch, players can also make "fog on control" a reality using the "Fog on Control" system. A new "Pitch" has also been introduced, which changes based on the weather, pitch size and surface type. In addition, FIFA 22 will feature multiple new sets of players; and to celebrate that, EA have announced "Ultimate Team Legends," which will let fans create their own alternate player names, including those of real-life legends such as Pele, Maradona and Ronaldo. With the inclusion of enhanced player expressions and animations, players will now show more emotion in a match, such as grimacing when they suffer a pain or expression when they're running through the defense towards the goal. The game will also feature new, more realistic injury animations. The return of the "Reserve Match" has also been revealed as a timed-exclusive version of the game, alongside new career-long challenges, such as the "Greece Check" series. The "Liga Euro Delivery" has also been introduced, which will let users order any European football league and actually receive their copy of the game when it arrives in the mail. Lastly, FIFA 22 also introduces the "Legends" mode, which lets users build their own football team in the game. The mode, exclusive to the Ultimate Team in FIFA 22, will also see the return of challenges, such as "Goal Rush." The game itself will run on Xbox One, PS4 and PC, but will not be released digitally until the “Legends” mode is released. FIFA 22 is expected to be released this November.
