Starting Up Photoshop After you install Photoshop and launch it, you're taken to a welcome screen that enables you to choose options for your operating system. Photoshop has three kinds of options, including: * Application Options You can choose how the program behaves. For example, you can choose whether it opens minimized, has a status bar, and so on. There are suboptions if you want more fine-tuning, such as text size, resolution, and so on. You can access these options by pressing at the bottom of the screen or by clicking Settings on the Application Options menu. Figure 3-1 shows the Application Options window. Figure 3-1: Choose the behavior of Photoshop from the Application Options window. * System Preferences This control lets you make settings for your system, including the number of windows to open and the size of the window. * Help This option contains a Help window that explains how to use the program. Photoshop has multiple windows, including a workspace, toolbox, and Layers palette. As I mention earlier, the Screen menu (not shown here) gives you control over window size and positioning.

Posts tagged 'Change Your Name To Http://alibaba.com.cn/' Chinese have been paying extra attention to Internet for a long time now, they are now moving to mobile phone too. Some people got themselves a smartphone to stay in touch with the e-world. And you're saying the list of applications is endless? Very true. You can find whatever you want on the Net. You can check your blog, your news, your email, your friends, you can shop online, you can play online games, pay online bills, etc. Now with the iPhone the mobile phone users can do more. They can just download the free software and do all of this right on their phone. But the mobile phone users should be very careful with what they download. There are more and more fraudulent apps floating around which are not legal. Take a look at the following picture. This is one of the popular free apps used by iPhone users. The big red star is what you can get from the app. I am sure it is a scam, because when it came to me, the price was 949. But it was already selling at 2,400 on Macau Market, then I felt it is a scam. I have seen plenty of online scams online, the complete opposite of this. Take a look at their site: Other popular free apps are available: 1. QMU (the Chinese version of Goo, now called qq) – it has a free account, and you can use your own mail box to receive messages. It has 50MB free storage space for users. The actual amount you can earn isn't bad at all, but you have to buy things in order to get money. Some of the apps provide fake invitation code to enter a lottery. I think they get your information and then send an invitation code to you. 2. Seniorusa.com – you can earn on the site by becoming an affiliate marketer. 3. Medikoo (free) – you can earn from the site via referrals. 4. Payshare.com – you can download games to earn money. (I have never used this one, I've only heard about it.) 5. QQWakeUp – you can earn from this site with fake invitations. This is not a free site; they charge you money for the game. 6. Get Paid to Sleep – don

Q: Setting Keep-Alive header when calling REST API in Angular (with express, node and mongoDB) I am calling an external REST API from my angular app, and get a connection timeout on Safari (version 9.0.1). The problem seems to stem from my server: it sends some headers to the client, which seems to be ignored by Safari and other browsers. The headers included are: Cache-Control: private Content-Encoding: gzip Content-Length: 2 Content-Type:

application/json; charset=utf-8 Date: Tue, 16 Oct 2016 17:11:31 GMT Keep-Alive: timeout=5, max=1000 Pragma: no-cache Server: ExpressJS Set-Cookie: connect.sid=s%3A9sjqapepogj8w5gtkew%2Fnwek.54055400371459637; Path=/ X-Powered-By: Express Here is a simplified example of my request:

try { const response = await http.get(url, requestOptions) } catch (err) { throw new Error(err) } return response

 What I understand from the headers sent by the server is: The server expects a response back in 5 seconds The server will hold this response for 5 seconds and will not send a response before the 5 seconds are up (the last request will be with a timeout error) When I remove the server header, or when I remove the Keep-Alive header, the request goes through. I know this is about Safari, and I know the issue is not that my call is async, since I tested it with several synchronous calls and I didn't have any problem. It also doesn't look like my request is too long (I could reproduce the problem with a one second request) Is it possible to set the headers on the Express side, so that they are sent with the request? A: Looks like this might have been fixed in the Express 4.16 release. See the upgrade guide at In particular see "Note on new CORS
