The c-fos oncogene product (Fos) is a 50 kDa protein which is thought to function in the regulation of gene transcription. It is rapidly induced by mitogenic signals at the transcriptional level, being regulated by multiple mechanisms including phosphorylation by other kinases, and association with other proteins. Fos is also present in a very tightly regulated and limiting pool of nuclear protein, and is generally seen as an early response gene. Fos also has a more complicated role in cell proliferation, in that it is part of the transcriptional activation complexes which mediate gene expression by Ets, NF- κ B, and CREB-family transcription factors. In order to examine the role of Fos in the control of gene transcription, and in the expression of specific genes, c-fos knockout mice have been produced by the gene targeting technique. c-fos knockout mice are viable and fertile, and develop normally and without apparent phenotype. c-fos mutant mice are defective in generating humoral immune response to sheep RBC, and defective in the production of IL-2, and are substantially impaired in their response to T cell mitogens. The c-fos gene is unique, in that a single point mutation results in the loss of transcriptional activity due to the loss of a zinc finger function. The c-fos gene is also unique, in that the single point mutant c-fos gene can be generated using the gene targeting technique. c-fos knock out mice were created by injection of the targeted embryonic stem cells into host blastocysts, with the result that only animals heterozygous for the deletion of c-fos are observed. Generation of the mutated gene with homologous recombination has been greatly facilitated by using oligonucleotides as templates for the insertion of the targeting construct. This strategy has allowed us to generate mutations in both alleles in a single embryonic stem cell clone, thereby greatly reducing the chance of secondary mutations. These animals, by being genetically identical, are expected to be much more useful for studying many questions related to the c-fos gene than any conventional strain of mice with alterations in the c-fos gene. To test the utility of these mice, we have generated a new c-fos knockout strain by the same gene targeting strategy, and are currently following up our primary observation by analyzing additional phenotypes related to c-fos. 1. Select the Clone Stamp Tool () or use 1. Draw a closed circle around the area you want to copy. 2. Move the cursor to another area of the image and, with the cursor over the region you want to copy, press and release the Ctrl key. 3. The image will copy the region within the circle. 4. Select the Blend Tool (V) or Pen tool (U) and click and drag over the area you want to blend to the rest of the image. 5. The image will blend the area you selected into the rest of the picture. 6. You can use the Eraser (E) or Flowstone Brush (F) to erase parts of your image. 7. There are different types of brush, such as the brush, pen, and airbrush. The brush tool and pen are often used to create drawings and painting effects. 8. The airbrush tool can be used to create high-definition airbrush outlines. ## Making a Logo with a Custom Brush The image in Figure 8-9 shows the Photoshop file for a simple logo I created. You can create various logos using the features of Photoshop, including color and type-based effects. The Brush and Selection tools are used to add artistic effects to your images. There are thousands of ready-made brushes for different uses, including lettering, design, and comic brush effects. 1. Create a new document and give the document a custom brush and a color scheme. 2. Create a logo using the drawing tools or symbols for your design. 3. Place the image on a new layer and merge the layer into the background using the menu option Merge Down (Ctrl/Command+Shift+E or Ctrl+J/Command+I). 4. Copy the layer and paste it into the new document. 5. Select the Brush tool () and click to activate the tool. 6. Click on the color icon in the bottom-left corner of the image to select a color. 7. With the Brush tool, paint over the letters to add color to the logo. 8. Select none from the Add to Selection tool (V) and use the Eraser (E) tool to remove any unwanted parts.
