GiliSoft Usb Lock 7.2.0 Gilisoft Video Editor 7.2.0 Crack(CNN) A federal appeals court on Monday upheld President Donald Trump's controversial ban on transgender people from serving in the military, handing a major victory to the White House and the Department of Defense. The third US Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia issued its ruling, affirming a lower court's decision that the ban is consistent with the federal law that governs national security decisions, and that transgender people do not meet that definition of a national security threat. "The order here is a lawful one -- a measured exercise of presidential authority," said Judge A. Raymond Randolph, the president of the three-judge panel. "Accordingly, the order is neither arbitrary nor capricious." The ruling is a major victory for the Trump administration, a solid position from which to defend the sweeping policy that has been a political lightning rod since Trump announced the ban in a series of tweets last summer. In December, the US Military Court of Appeals ruled that the administration could not implement the ban on transgender people while the legal challenge was pending. But six days later, in the first action taken against the policy, the Pentagon ordered it stopped and left the door open to a return to the previous policy -- one that explicitly allowed transgender people to serve in the military if they "met the medical and readiness standards" for their gender. The decision from the Philadelphia-based three-judge panel keeps the door open for transgender service members to continue serving in the military. The Justice Department had no comment. "We believe we met the legal standard," said Navy Secretary Richard Spencer in a statement on Monday. "We will stand ready to implement the current policy if necessary, but until the order has been stayed by the Supreme Court, we will continue to comply with our policy and not review the policy to determine current readiness." The ruling comes after the Supreme Court last week heard arguments in a separate transgender rights case -- one that could decide whether a federal government, in this case the Trump administration, can bar transgender people from using restrooms in accordance with their gender identity. That Supreme Court case will be heard by a full bench of justices when it is taken up in the fall. The military case involving the transgender ban and the restroom case are two separate lawsuits that are on 1cdb36666d
