in history on clicking browser back button? I want to create a chrome extension that adds a new feature. I want to put a button on my website, so when a user clicks on the button it goes back one step in the history. But only for chrome extensions. I want to use the `browser.onbackclick` event, so that it only happens when a user hits back on chrome, not when clicking back on the home page on their web browser. I want to keep track of how many times the user goes back on the history. A: You can listen to `popstate` event and store values in a cookie. And with response to `popstate` event you can push to history. `chrome.tabs.onUpdated.addListener(function (info) {`

Ask HN: How many users/month does a "big" Web 2.0/Social Media site have? - vinhnglng

The users have already increased, of course. But what does a site need to have to be considered "big", and is it sustainable for them to be big for so many months? ===== GiraffeNecktie

Some useful statistics: ----- pmorici My take on it is that if you have more users than the sites on that list your site is probably small and the people writing about your site have it wrong. ~~~

vinhnglng Nice. Thanks for sharing. ----- dylanhassinger big is subjective. clearly you're already pretty big. just wanted to know since it's a question I could never really answer for myself. (some sites, like google, are just big in so many ways)

Don't let the crisis prevent us from realizing that we're victims. We've long since forgotten that we're the victims of a mythological "them"—but now that we're in the aftermath of a natural catastrophe, that's starting to come back to us, in painful waves. That's why, three weeks ago, I began my own 10-part series titled "Everyday Life Is a Fight," where I've been trying to answer the questions that arise in our everyday lives: Who are we, really, and what do we want to do with our lives? I've had the chance to think and talk with and meet people from all over the world—from Angola, to Northern
