(AXE) – Download Ra Deep House Keys (AXE)The present invention pertains to a locking device for interlocking structural members having complementary structure, and more particularly to a locking device which cooperates with lock members of the complementary structure so as to permit rotation of one member with respect to the other and to prevent removal of one from the other under the force of internal or external forces.

There are many applications in which a structural member must be locked in a fixed position with respect to another, but which permits rotation of the two members relative to one another, when rotated by an external force such as that of a vehicle striking the assembly. For example, such assemblies may comprise a superstructure carried by a base, with the superstructure carrying a door, window or hatch. It is desirable to provide a protective locking device which locks the superstructure to the base and which permits the superstructure to be rotated, so as to permit its relative movement with respect to the base, in the event that the superstructure is struck by an impacting vehicle. In order to achieve this, it is known to provide a lock assembly within the structural members such as base and superstructure. Typically, the lock assembly comprises an engaging element which is received by a complementary aperture in the other structural member, and further comprises a bolt which is slidably received in a bolt hole formed in one of the structural members.

The bolt holes have complementary structure, such as a hexagonal cross-section, and the bolt holes typically are enlarged to receive a hexagonal drive head. The aperture in the other structural member is similarly structured. Thus, rotation of the bolt from a first position into a second
