A nurse gives a patient a cloth mask to protect from being infected by the Ebola virus, during a vaccination drive in the village of Hloa, near the capital Dakar, Senegal September 16, 2018. REUTERS/Sylvain Cherkauoi The medical charity Medecins sans Frontieres (MSF) said on Twitter it had completed two planned procedures at the Bouso Clinic in Dakar - removing the infected man's gall bladder and appendicitis - to allow him to focus on treatment. The man, who had been working with MSF on a remote border post with Guinea before arriving in Senegal, was critically ill for over a week. "Today, the patient is in critical but stable condition, and the team is waiting for the test results on the appendix operation," the MSF said in a statement. "We wish him a full recovery and are grateful for the rapid reaction of the government, together with the support of our partners, which allowed the patient to be treated at the Bouso Clinic with full access to the best facilities." While the most deadly outbreak of the Ebola virus in history is in the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC), there have been at least 2,222 cases and 1,997 deaths in west Africa, with a large number of cases and deaths from the virus in Nigeria and Senegal. Senegal has been praised for its preparedness and early response to the outbreak, which it has contained so far. It has said the case was a first for the country. The man's treatment was carried out on September 9, said Dr Sophie Toin, the surgeon who treated the patient. A sample was sent to 595f342e71
