A cubic graph  $G$  is a graph such that every induced subgraph has order at most three. What can we say about cubic graphs? Is there a graph-theoretic characterization? For example, are there any nice results that characterize cubic graphs in terms of excluded minors for the class of 3-regular graphs? A: A cubic graph with girth at least five has no induced subgraph homeomorphic to  $K_{2,3}$ . A cubic graph with girth at most four has no induced subgraph homeomorphic to  $K_{2,2,2}$ . If it has girth at most three, then it has an induced subgraph homeomorphic to  $K_{1,3}$ . Such graphs are said to be dipteral, and the obvious construction gives a complete classification of these graphs up to homeomorphism. In fact, the only generalized Petersen graph  $SP(t)$  with chromatic number three is  $SP(2)$ , and there are uncountably many  $SP(t)$  with chromatic number three when  $t \geq 3$ , so these graphs are not even in the same homotopy class as  $K_{2,3}$ . There are five other special graphs constructed in this way, but they're all bipartite. So, if you want to write up a complete classification of graphs that are cubic and girth at least five, you have three missing bipartite graphs, one missing bipartite graph that's not 595f342e71
