David Clarkson is back in the NHL. The entire world knows that it's a stupid move. It's so obvious that the consensus is that it was one of the worst trade in NHL history. But the Devils made the deal anyway, and both parties are probably going to be happy with the results. Clarkson was a savior for the Devils during the 2011-12 season, and should have been in the conversation for the team's MVP award. He scored 30 goals, assisted on 50 more, and led the team in plus/minus with a whopping +21. Aside from Taylor Hall, who only barely missed out on the Art Ross trophy, Clarkson was one of the best Devils players in 2012-13. The Devils trade marked a major step back as a franchise. In return, the Devils got KHL superstar Petr Sykora, who probably brings a lot more value to this current team than Clarkson did when he was here. The Devils received a 30 year-old who has scored 68 goals and 146 points in the NHL. But Sykora is just one guy. The Devils' trade for Clarkson was about acquiring future assets, and future assets are far more valuable than current assets. What did the Devils do in return for Sykora? They acquired two young prospects who won't make the Devils roster. They also got some prospects who are no longer in the Devils system. Upgrading Adam Larsson Larsson is a defenseman who has picked up a lot of interest in the NHL. Many teams have asked about him. The Devils are one of those teams. He has the size at 6'2" and 208 pounds to be a big defensive defenseman. According to Eliteprospects.com, Larsson is a right-handed shot and projects to play on the left-side. Larsson has very solid offensive skills, and he can stickhandle well. He's got a good shot, and he's a strong skater. He's got puck possession capabilities, which seems to be the area where Larsson can make the biggest improvement. He's also got decent vision and passing skills, and strong positioning skills. Larsson is a good defenseman, but he has some weaknesses, and the Devils will need to find a way to work with him. The Devils have a good defense in front of Larsson, and he won't need to be
