Language: English Category: WindowsQ: Making WPF Combobox self-clearing when parent combobox loses focus I am trying to implement something like "Mystery" option in an N-user list, where the second user chooses the first one's location. I have a Telerik RadComboBox that contains a list of Locations. The user can select a location, then another user, then another, and so on, until they have selected the last location. As they are typing, the previous user's location is kept in the combobox until the enter key is pressed or another location is selected. I have worked with the problem of keeping the previous location in the combobox before (in the Searchbox example) and I'm happy with it. The problem I'm having is this: The list of locations are displayed in the Combobox in the default mode: multiple selection. When the user chooses a location, I need to be able to clear it as their choice. I can do this with the following code: `private void OnLocationSelection(object sender, SelectionChangedEventArgs e) { if (MysteryLocationCombobox.SelectedItem != null) { MysteryLocationCombobox.SelectedIndex = 0; MysteryLocationCombobox.SelectedItem = null; } }` In this example, the mystery combobox gets cleared with the selection. The problem is that if this

MouseClicked is a lightweight software application designed with a single goal in mind: to help you automate mouse clicks. This way, you can step away from the computer, take a break, and avoid suffering from Repetitive Strain Injury. The tool's purpose is to help you perform left, right and double mouse clicks, and drag windows, scrollbars and other elements. The advantages of being portable Since this is a portable program, it is important to mention that it doesn't leave any traces in the Windows Registry. You can copy it on any USB flash drive or other devices, and take it with you whenever you need to get rid of repetitive tasks on the fly, without having to go through installation steps. Unobtrusive running mode The tool runs quietly in the system tray without interfering with your work. When called upon, it reveals several configuration settings to tinker with. Main features MouseClick waits until the mouse stops moving and automatically triggers the clicking process. There's support for several tweaking parameters that allow you enter a custom delay time, set the distance before clicking on the desired area (so you can avoid accidental clicks), as well as assign hotkeys for dragging items, clicking with the aid of the left or right button, and starting or stopping the process. Last but not least, you can enable or disable the application, make the utility remain on top of other windows, show the tool in the taskbar, as well as set the transparency. Fast performance During our testing we have noticed that MouseClick carries out a task quickly, and no errors showed up throughout the entire process. Since there aren't many configuration settings, even less experienced users can set up the dedicated parameters with minimum effort. Bottom line To sum things up, MouseClick offers a simple software solution when it comes to helping you automate mouse clicks.
