The Hollywood Reporter recounts how friction grew when a segment of the recruited Christian viewers questioned the Bible story and reacted negatively to the intensity and darkness of the lead character. Their perception of a lack of fidelity to the Bible, moreover, was bound up in this portrayal of Noaheven in cases where the film followed Genesis: Were there fallen angels on the earth before the Flood, and did they teach knowledge to humankind Whether or not Genesis 6:1-4 alludes to this idea in its terse reference to the sons of God coming down to the daughters of men, it soon became part of how ancient Jews and Christians understood these events. These figures appear as part of the Flood story alongside Enoch and Methuselah already in the third century BCE in some of the oldest Jewish writings that survive outside the Hebrew Bible.
