

the incidence of ebola virus disease (evd) in the democratic republic of the congo (drc) has risen sharply since last year. the who has declared the outbreak as a public health emergency of international concern and has stepped up its response. the drc health ministry reported 623 confirmed, probable, and suspected cases of evd from 1 april to 25 july 2014. at least 63 people have died from the disease, which is associated with high case fatality rate (47 percent as of 7 july 2014). the outbreak is concentrated in the north kivu and ituri provinces in the east of the drc, and the most recent incidence is reported from the mangina area in south kivu. a 7-year-old boy, who was not vaccinated against evd, died on 9 july in katwa, north kivu. the outbreak in the drc is the second largest in history. the first evd outbreak in drc, which began in the 1990s, was also in north kivu. in april 2014, the outbreak area was certified as an evd-free area by the who, thus ending the ebola outbreak. in developing countries, the use of oral health services is low. in the united states, although oral health care is free of charge, it is used by only 60 percent of patients and only 40 percent of adults have any dental insurance [76]. in sub-saharan africa, it is not uncommon for a child to receive the first dental visit as an adult. although the basis of universal health coverage is expanding, it is not widely used, especially in developing countries. in many cases, the healthcare services are inadequate, have low coverage and are not integrated [76]. a study by the world health organization (who) has shown that every year, 4.4 million people die because of oral diseases. oral health can be improved by improving water and sanitation, nutrition, education, and access to dental care. there are many barriers to oral health, such as poverty, poor oral hygiene, and lack of education about oral health. there is also a lack of trained personnel and equipment to treat oral diseases. in developing countries, dental diseases, especially dental caries, are the most common chronic condition, responsible for more than 60 percent of all chronic conditions in the united states. each year, more than 64 million people in the united states suffer from some form of dental disease. the dental caries risk assessment tool is a simple and effective tool to assess the oral health of patients, providing a clear and simple way to assess the risk of dental caries. the dental caries risk assessment tool provides a comprehensive tool that is appropriate to use in the dental practice to determine the risk of dental caries and to provide early intervention to reduce the risk.
